THE WINTER SACRIFICE.

From out the North the harsh wise leaps,
As hound upon the trail;
Across the sagebrush sea it sweeps,
O'er snow-filled draw and swale;
It howks about the ranch house lone—
The children sob in fright;
Frost dime the pane through which has shone
One warm and friendly light.

Across the plain the cold winds fig-

Across the piain the cold winds fly—
On, o'er the open waste;
A thousand voices seem to cry;
"Make haste—oh, still make haste"
And, huddled in the mountight clean,
Far from corral and pen,
What are the creatures freezing here?
These are the Friends of Men. The Friends of Men-with heads that

And eyes that death shall close;
About their shivering forms there swoop
The demons of the snows;
The Friends of Men—theirs to give All—self-mark have they learned;
Men's baseness have they learned;
Left on the wintry plains to fall
For friendship unreturned!

FROST PICTURES.

When, like a sullen exile driven forth, Southward, December drags his ley chain. He graves fair pictures of his native On the crisp windowpane.

The fairy fragments of some Arctic The Inity traginal come a scone
I see tonight; blank wastes of polar snow,
Lce-iaden boughs, and feathery pines that lead
Over ravines below.

Bleak frozen lakes, and ley peaks blown bare. Break the white surface of the crusted pane. And spear-like leaves, long ferns, and blossoms fair Linked in a silvery chain. Finrk how the north wind with a hasty hand,

Rattling my casement, frames his mystic rhymes;
House thee, rude minstrel, chanting thro' the land.
Runes of the olden times.

The German demand for apples and nuts to hang on Christmas trees is always very great. The inland production of apples, even in a favorable year, although large, is far too small for the demand, in spite of the fact that thousands of acres of new trees are planted each year. In order to supply the inland market, large quantities of apples and nuts must be imported from abroad each year.
